

SPOTLIGHT ON LINC ENERGY

Linc Energy gained the most in six months after increasing the estimate of a Queensland coal resource and saying a state policy provided “certainty of tenure” for the project. Shares advanced 46.5¢, or 38 per cent, to $1.69, outpacing a 1.8 per cent gain in ASX’s benchmark energy index.

After the market closed last Friday Linc said the Chinchilla deposit might hold 775 million tonnes of coal, 29 per cent more than estimated in August. The resource is enough to supply a 20,000 barrels-a-day coal-to-liquids project for more than 60 years, chief executive Peter Bond said.

In a statement to the stock exchange Linc said a new Queensland Government policy tackling overlapping licences held by underground coal gasification and coal seam gas companies would allow production trials to continue as planned at the Chinchilla site, about 300 kilometres north-west of Brisbane.
